

EXPERT OPINION ON SUBWAYS

City Engineer Rosewater Enters Into a Detailed Discussion.

WILL SOON MAKE REPORT TO COUNCIL

While the City Engineer Has Not Definitely Settled on a Plan It Is Certain He Favors Subways.

In compliance with the request of the council, City Engineer Andrew Rosewater is preparing an opinion on subways which will be included in his annual report, to be submitted to the council in a short time. Mr. Rosewater went to New York and other eastern cities to secure data, and has the assistance of City Electrician E. P. Schurig, who recently returned from Chicago, where he made a special study of the methods employed in burying electric wires. In 1891 Mr. Rosewater served on the Electrical Commission for the District of Columbia and spent a year in planning the subways which are now used in Washington.

"My report is incomplete at this time and I cannot announce exactly what plan of subways I will recommend for Omaha. In fact, I have not fully decided yet. I am positive, however, that subways are practicable. Investigation of the systems in use in various cities has convinced me of this," said Mr. Rosewater. "I also know that municipal subways have been successful in some cities. They are like municipal water companies and their success depends entirely upon the amount of business judgment exercised in their management."

Electrical Stock Argument.
"Electrical companies invariably contend that it is not advisable to put wires of a heavy and light voltage in the same subways. This is the stock argument which is advanced in all cities which propose to construct subways. It is fallacious. New York, Chicago and other cities have the wires of light companies, power companies and telegraph and telephone companies in the same conduits. When the construction is good there is no induction."

"While I was serving on the Electrical Commission for the District of Columbia in 1891 the Western Union Telegraph company secured a number of professional electricians, who appeared before the commission and testified that it would be absolutely impossible for the company to operate its lines if they were placed in subways with other wires. We communicated with W. H. Preece of London, who had charge of the postal telegraph system in Great Britain, and he assured us that in England the government had had its telegraph wires in subways with all sorts of other wires and that the service was not impaired in the least."

"Other electricians who had had wide experience with electrical conduits offered similar testimony and we recommended a system of subways for Washington. Congress adopted our recommendations and the companies soon had their wires underground. The system is entirely satisfactory. Washington's experience is the same as that of many other American cities. In the last ten years there has been a great improvement in the construction of conduits."

Gas Causes No Trouble.
"Gas in conduits used to cause considerable trouble, but this has been done away with by connecting manholes with gas lamps and consuming the gas before enough of it accumulates to be dangerous. The explosions which electrical companies tell of are a thing of the past and fear of this sort of accidents should not prevent a city from constructing conduits. It is also contended that water in subways causes much trouble and makes them impracticable, but there is no truth in this objection. Subways can be readily connected with sewers and water need not affect wires where care is exercised."

"It is also maintained that electrolysis plays havoc with cables in subways; that electricity is transferred from one duct to another and ruins the insulation and wires. No such difficulty has been experienced in any wires which are built according to approved methods. Terra cotta is the most desirable material for conduits. Age does not affect it. Metal ducts which are lined with cement are impaired by age. The cement cracks and drops down on the wires. Some cities wooden conduits which have been treated with creosote are used, but these are not as durable as terra cotta."

Baltimore Sets Example.
"If subways were a failure it is strange that Baltimore should be constructing one at the present time. When Seth Low was mayor of New York he contended that wires of all sort could be placed in conduits side by side without conflict of currents. Various electrical companies said this was impossible and assured Low that he would ruin their business if he carried out his plan. They were notified that all wires must be buried within a certain time, but failed to pay any attention to the order. Finding that the companies were disposed to run over him, Low sent out large parties of workmen who began to cut down the poles of the various companies. It was only a short time until they put all their cables underground and nobody has heard any complaint from them since that time. They were merely trying to avoid the expense of placing their wires out of danger."

"After wires have been placed in subways the expense of maintenance is no greater than when they are overhead. In some cities the wires of high and low voltage are on different sides of the subway and a partition wall is frequently constructed to prevent any possible communication between the different sorts of currents. Where cables are placed in direct terra cotta ducts there is little danger of communication and in some cities several wires are placed in the same duct."

NEW YORK HAS GOLD TO SPARE

England Can Have $25,000,000 Without Perceptibly Affecting the American Market.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—The Evening Post says: As a result of the advance in the bank of England discount rate, local financiers discussed the possibility of gold being attracted from this quarter in the event of a decided money stringency in London. One of the best known foreign bankers pointed out that the flow of gold from London to Paris would not doubt cease in consequence of higher bank rates.

"To that extent," he added, "the London situation will be helped. People in France will be quick to invest in sterling exchange if the London market offers a profit. That will put up the rates for exchange and counteract the attraction. But if they need more assistance and are willing to pay for it we can easily let them have some gold. Money will not be tight here and we can accommodate them if need be."

Another financier said that New York could easily let London have $25,000,000 gold without money market disturbances, as this city would probably have a plethora of money before long as a result of the return flow of currency.

A STRANGE CASE OF MEMORY.

A Well Known Man Forgets His Name and Completely Forgets His Actions.

One of the strangest things that result from the excessive use of intoxicating liquors is that of the occasional lapse of memory that takes place in the inebriated. A remarkable instance of this occurred about a month ago with a well-known citizen of one of the cities of western Nebraska. His name is not mentioned in this article at his own request for the reason, as he states, that his family and friends already know too much of the result of his excess. The strange experience is best told in his own language as related to one of the Bee staff today. He said: "I had been drinking liquor to great excess for several years and for two months preceding the experience that I am now about to speak of I was on an awful and continuous spree day and night, the amount of liquor I took into my system during these two months is now something terrible to contemplate. At the end of a day's hard drinking, about as near as I can remember the 10th day of December, I found myself in a back room in the leading hotel of my town with a quart bottle of whisky. From that time on and until the 24th day of December is a complete blank. I remember having examined my pockets in the back room to see how much money I had with me, and I had less than $1. I also remember that I was in an awful nervous condition and the walls of the room seemed constantly to be circling in on me. I had not been home for over two weeks and I was in a desperate condition mentally, besides my family and my business troubles, all of which I seemed to realize. The strange part of the story is to be told. While I was in this unconscious condition in which memory had completely lapsed, I must have proceeded with perfect method and care in the management of my household and came to Omaha, for I was found on the streets of this city on the night of December 22 with nothing on but a hat, an overcoat and a pair of shoes, by a friend who recognized my condition and charged me home. He found that I had about the same change in my pocket as I had the last time of which I had any memory. As my city is more than 200 miles from Omaha and as I am informed by a letter from home that I was not seen in my home city since the 16th of last month, it must be that I have been either in this city or on the road during all of the time between December 10 and December 22. My friend took care of me for two days, or until December 24, when seeing he could have nothing done to help me out of the deplorable condition in which I was, he took me where I ought to have been sent five years ago. I woke up on the morning of the 24th day of December and found myself in a room in the Keeley institute, corner of 19th and Leavenworth streets, in this city. I have been taking the Keeley treatment for ten days and feel better than I have felt in ten years. God bless Dr. Keeley, he has brought peace and happiness to many a wretched home."

AMERICAN'S VIEW OF CHINA

Captain Grothe Huteson Writes of Affairs in the Flowery Kingdom.

A letter received from Captain Grothe Huteson by M. N. Greeley, chief clerk in the adjutant general's office of the Department of the Missouri, U. S. A., gives some of the experience of the writer since leaving the headquarters for the scene of the Chinese troubles.

Captain Huteson, upon his arrival at Tien Tsin, was made adjutant general of the American relief expedition and as such organized the forces for the forward movement. He held this position until October 4, when he was relieved by Colonel Heintzelman, who was detailed for this service from Paris, where he was military attaché. In this duty was performed he became inspector general and judge advocate of the expedition, being retained in China upon the departure of his regiment, the Sixth cavalry, for Manila.

October 12 he accompanied an expedition to Pao Ting Fo, the expedition being made up of such difficult as the Chinese, French, German and Italian troops. August 4, with the United States army, he entered the city of Peking and received a slight wound upon the hand from a Chinese bullet. The injury was so trifling that he was not incapacitated from duty. The weather was excessively warm in the Chinese capital until the middle of September, when it began to turn cool rapidly.

At the present time the headquarters of the American forces is in the temple of agriculture, one of the numerous temples of the city, and the captain says that while it may be the home of a Chinese god, it is neither comfortable nor convenient, from an American standpoint.

TO REORGANIZE DEMOCRACY

Club Formed in New York Which Is to Undertake the Task.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—The Journal and Advertiser says: Grover Cleveland, David R. Hill, Daniel S. Lamont, William F. Sheehan, William C. Whitney, Jacob A. Cantor and other democrats, it is announced, have become members of the Samuel J. Tilden club, with headquarters at Broadway and Seventy-second street, for the purpose of promoting the reorganization of the democracy and to promulgate true democratic principles throughout the United States. It is to be a national as well as a state institution and will seek to nominate for office only "simon pure" democrats, running on "old-fashioned" democratic platforms.

The 200 men who the incorporators assert have already signified their intention of joining are to be summoned early in the coming week, at which time officers are to be chosen. Fisher Dowling, head of the contracting firm of Plake & Dowling, may be the first president.

The names of Jacob A. Cantor, for years the democratic leader of the state senate; Samuel J. Hotchkiss, William Arrowsmith and Perez M. Stewart, who defeated Robert Maser for the assembly a year ago, appear upon the articles of incorporation.

This is what Senator Cantor had to say about the club after a long conference with former Lieutenant Governor William F. Sheehan and Anthony N. Brady of Albany: "The Samuel J. Tilden club has been incorporated in response to the wishes of the democrats who are desirous that the party shall not continue to lose, but rather to win battles at the polls. We shall, instead of fighting for 16 to 1, fight for tariff reform, against subsidies, against centralization of power and the other great issues on which the democracy has heretofore gone to the people and won many a victory."

Such men as Grover Cleveland, David R. Hill, William C. Whitney, Daniel S. Lamont join your club," was asked.

"We certainly should not have formed it were we not assured of the sympathy of men of their type."

SERGEANT WHELAN EXPLAINS

Well Known Police Officer Replies to Criticisms of Dr. George L. Miller.

Sergeant Michael Whelan of the Omaha police force feels keenly the criticisms of Dr. George L. Miller upon his treatment at the hands of the Omaha police at the time referred to in his recent article in The Bee.

The sergeant said yesterday morning: "I was the one who had the most to do with the detention of Dr. Miller and I desire to say that a more painful duty never was appointed for me. When I was called upon to take him in charge I refused until I had received the advice of his friends. I called upon Dr. Miller and he then only acted under the instructions of the attending physician. It was not necessary to use force upon the doctor and at no time did I do more than to lay my hand upon his arm, from the time I took him into custody to the time he was taken to St. Bernard's hospital. I was sorry to have to take him to the police station and I felt at that time it was no place for a man of his standing, for I had always admired the doctor and felt his position keenly. At the station we did all that was in our power to do for him."

YOU CAN DO ANYTHING.

There Are No Restrictions on Life Insurance Policy Holders Today.

Nothing could be more marked concerning life insurance than the freedom of action which is accorded to the policyholder today compared to the restrictions that were imposed upon the insured of earlier times. A man was limited originally as to his avocations, and callings were classified as hazardous, extra hazardous, etc., according to the real or supposed danger of death involved in following them. The policyholder could not travel at all to speak of without special permission and was restricted in his choice of residence. The whole matter of risk, outside the tables of life expectancy, was then really but little understood, and time alone has been able to show that a thousand healthy men are pretty sure to live and die according to the tables, no matter where they reside, what they work at, or how they behave.

In those days a man could hardly go across the street without chancing the invalidation of his policy, while today he may follow any pursuit, live almost anywhere, do what he likes, travel as he pleases, even go to war if so disposed, and his policy will still remain in full force and effect. With some companies he is even allowed, after being insured a year or two, the privilege of killing himself if he is fool and accidental enough to do so, from which it can be seen that there are practically no restrictions whatever to hedge about the insurance of today.

It might, perhaps, be better if there were a few, for it may be argued that so valuable a boon as life insurance would be even more highly prized were the policyholder to understand that some good faith and good deeds were just as essential to his side of the contract as on that of the company's. Time was that when a policyholder ceased paying his premiums and his indemnity stopped, just as it does with fire insurance, but now, after a few annual premiums, there remain for him surrender values, or paid up insurance in proportion to what he put in, if he chooses to discontinue. About the only thing he has lost is the inalienable one of having to pay the rates of his advanced age if he wishes to be again insured. That, at least, is something that competition, "liberality of management," fool statutes, or anything else will never be able to overcome.

EXPERIMENTING ON GRASSES

Park Commissioner Cornish Talks of Nebraska's University Farm.

E. J. Cornish, member of the Board of Park Commissioners, visited the experimenting farm near Lincoln, which is operated in connection with the University of Nebraska, and was much impressed with the work which is being carried on there. "The men in charge of the farm are securing information which will be of great assistance to the agricultural interests of the state," said Mr. Cornish, "and their experiments are of a sort which no farmer could carry out on his own land. I was interested particularly in a field which Prof. Lyon calls his graveyard. It is divided into small squares by stakes and each plot is given over to the cultivation of some native Nebraska grass."

Mr. Cornish said that the value of such a field is that the experimental farm is studying them very carefully and making an effort to learn how to propagate them more successfully. For years it has been known that grama grass, which thrives in western Nebraska, is more desirable for hay than any of the tame grasses. Express companies and other corporations which feed a large number of horses have bought this grass in preference to any other and it brings a high price. It has been impossible to try the grass in other parts of the state because it does not seed freely.

"Several years the professors in charge of the farm secured a start of this grass and from year to year they have carefully planted the seed from the stems of grass which they have gathered in the field. They have succeeded in developing grass which now yields considerable seed and in a short time they hope to be able to have enough of this seed to put on the market."

INDIAN DEPOT IS LOCATED

New Institution Will Occupy a Part of Old Mercer Hotel Building.

It was decided yesterday to locate the new Indian supply depot in the Gahm block, formerly the Mercer hotel, at the corner of Twelfth and Howard streets. The depot will occupy six floors and basement, with a total floor space of 23,100 square feet.

The council has before it an ordinance granting to the Omaha & Southwestern railway the right to run a spur track up the alley between Harney and Howard streets. It is probable that the track will be made to secure an extension of the track if its construction is permitted at all, across Twelfth street to the rear entrance of the Indian supply depot.

UNION PACIFIC IMPROVEMENTS

One Million Dollars to Be Expended in Rebuilding Its Kansas Lines.

As a result of the recent tour of inspection which the executive officials of the Union Pacific made over the Kansas lines of that road, the report is current that extensive improvements are contemplated on the entire Kansas division. Most of this improvement, it is understood, will be in the nature of grade reduction and curve elimination, and the greater part of the work will be carried on between Kansas City and Topeka and Salina and Ellsworth. The Union Pacific's tracks between Kansas City and Topeka are used jointly by the Union Pacific and the Rock Island. For many years the Rock Island has desired a line of its own between the Kansas capital and Kansas City, but as yet the possibility of such a line is remote, and the Rock Island will bear its proportion of the expense incurred in improvement of the Union Pacific line, in which it is interested. The improvements planned will, it is said, cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000.

Cleanly woman has an erroneous idea that by scouring the scalp, which removes the dandruff scales, she is curing the dandruff. She may wash her scalp every day and yet have dandruff her life long, accompanied by falling hair, too. The only way in the world to cure dandruff is to kill the dandruff germ and there is no hair preparation that will do that but Newbro's Herpicide. Herpicide, killing the dandruff germ, leaves the hair free to grow as healthy nature intended. Destroy the cause you remove the effect. Kill the dandruff germ with Herpicide.
